Basically, I have had OCD in the past. It never really went away but I have learnt to control it. I have to repeatedly check things, check all the hiding places in my house before I go to sleep, and I always end up turning my light on and off a few times before I finally settle down to sleep. I get very scared easily. And I have made the mistake over the past two days of watching Paranormal ...

Ever since I can remember, I have heard voices. They aren't voices that tell me to do bad things or anything like that. They seem to call to me and try to get my attention. For example, the voices could say my name or simply, "Hey". Or, "Over here!" It isn't too emotionally distressing but I'd like to know why this happens.

Best answer: Self harm and suicide are completely different, people self harm to STOP feeling suicidal. Self harm is where you intentionally cause pain to yourself like hair-pulling, hitting, scratching, cutting and head banging. They do this because they feel so out of control and want to stop the internal pain so they cause physical pain to distract themselves from the internal pain.
