I am studying Physics at AS level, under the AQA-A syllabus. I bought the advanced physics for you textbook. In the back, it lists which sections I should revise from. However, I don't trust this because other sections in the book are things I know should be on my exam, yet the book does not tell me to study these. I know this is a shot in the dark, but does anyone have any idea which sections ...

Best Answer: This doesn't seem like a good or a worthwhile experiment. If you want to find the time at which the racing car crosses the finish line, why not simply place a sensor there instead of at A or C? Also, instead of using x,y co-ordinates, why not simply use distance around the track? Since the cars ...
