Translating Word Problems into Equations - AlgebraLAB

In this tutorial, we will be looking at solving a specific type of equation called the quadratic equation. The methods of solving these types of equations that we will take a look at are solving by factoring, by using the square root method, by completing the square, and by using the quadratic equation.

Laplace's equation can be solved by separation of variables in all 11 coordinate systems that the Helmholtz differential equation can. The form these solutions take is summarized in the table above. In addition to these 11 coordinate systems, separation can be achieved in two additional coordinate systems by introducing a multiplicative factor.

This question is a little easier. We do it the same way as the first step of the previous problem and then we stop. To find out how many moles of salt are contained in 300. ml of a 0.40 M NaCl solution, we start with the volume in liters (0.300 L) and multiply it by the number of moles per liter of solution, which is 0.40 moles over 1.00 L.

Solving logarithmic equations usually requires using properties of logarithms. The reason you usually need to apply these properties is so that you will have a single logarithmic expression on one or both sides of the equation. Once you have used properties of logarithms to condense any log expressions in the equation, you can solve the problem by changing the logarithmic equation into an ...
