Answer: We certainly forget things over time, and there's no reason to expect that what students learn in school should be any exception. But take heart: we don't forget everything, and under some conditions, we remember nearly everything. Researchers have some understanding of why we're likely to overestimate what we've forgotten.

The Simplified Spelling Board was an American organization created in 1906 to reform the spelling of the English language, making it simpler and easier to learn, and eliminating many of what were considered to be its inconsistencies. The board operated until 1920, the year after the death of its founding benefactor, who had come to criticize the progress and approach of the organization.

Question: In recent months, there's been a big uproar about students being paid to take standardized tests—and being paid even more if they do well. Can cognitive science shed any light on this debate? Is it harmful to students to reward them like this? What about more typical rewards like a piece of candy or five extra minutes of recess?
